

street and Washington avenue. He followed her to Nugent's store on Broadway, near the corner of Washington and Franklin avenues and then asked her what she was there for. She said she was looking for blankets. Mr. Peabody did not charge her with being there to meet him.

"I did."

"Why did you so charge her?"

"We believed she met them by appointment."

"Who were these men?"

"They were in the court-room now. I can't tell their names."

Mr. Peabody was nonplussed by this answer, and a very faint, anxious smile swept around the room.

"I'd like for those men to show themselves to me," said Mr. Peabody, "but I won't pursue the matter."

Then the spectators laughed.

"Did you charge her with intending to meet them?"

"Julia Bertero."

"Did she meet him?"

"She was catching her."

Mrs. Bert was smiling through most of this as if she remembered something very ridiculous, but the spectators could not see the most trying part of her husband's testimony was an increase of color in her cheeks, which turned her hair red.

"You were satisfied in your own mind that your wife was an immoral woman?" Mr. Peabody asked.

"Yes, I was."

"Why then did you go to living with her after the second separation if you believed that?"

"For the sake of the boy."

"You think that a husband should bury his son, and live with an immoral woman for the sake of the boy?"

"Under such circumstances."

Mrs. Bert laid forward and suggested to her counsel: "Did he want such a mother to raise his boy?"

The question was asked. The witness answered:

"I did not want her to raise the boy, but I did want to avoid the scandal."

"Had you ever been married with that way?"

Mr. Peabody asked the witness.

"Yes, I was."

"Do you recognize the movement of the eyes as stirring?"

"What did she do?"

"She fixed her eyes."

Mr. Ellis objected to the witness illustrating the act. "He can't do it," the attorney said.

"Had you ever been married with that way?"

Mr. Peabody asked the witness.

"Yes, I was."

"Did she ever look at you that way?"

"No, sir."

Mrs. Bert's brown eyes were shaded during this examination.

THE EXPOSITION APPOINTMENT.

Mr. Peabody went into the apartment. Mr. Bert sat down at the "personal" advertisement with two ladies in front of the Exposition. Mr. Bert was at the office of the exposition, the office of J. J. M. Brown, whom Mr. Bertero expected to join him in the adventure.

"Did you go with Mr. Bertero?"

"I thought I might find out something about my wife. I was looking for her."

"You thought your wife was married to the personal Bertero inserted in the paper making this appointment?"

"Did you say or say anything to Mr. Bertero about it?"

"Yes, sir."

"You were very friendly when you met him in front of the Exposition."

"Yes, sir, and went with him to the restaurant to drink wine."

"Did you ask the women if they knew anything about your wife?"

"I did not then."

MR. RICE'S LAST HOUR.

The testimony of Mr. Bert was interrupted to put F. W. H. Wieschahn, the handwriting expert, on the stand. Mr. Wieschahn was shown the draft of the letter of evidence on Tuesday, the writing of which was denied by Mrs. Bert. He was shown the letter to Mr. Bert, the writing of which was admitted by Mr. Bert. Wieschahn was shown the admitted letter and the written over it and the same person. He explained how it was done in the conclusion. The drafts of Mr. Bert were shown.

MR. BERT AGAIN.

Mr. Bert resumed the stand. He told Mr. Peabody that as far as his wife's flirting with Joshua Brooks in Schneider's Garden. She turned her head continually during the performance, and in this instance he attempted to approach to join Mrs. Bert. He talked to her a few minutes and then went away without being introduced to the witness.

CAPT. ZALINSKI.

The Military Attaché to the American Legation at St. Petersburg.

Fv Telegram to the POST-DISPATCH.

New York, May 18. Capt. L. Zalinski, the newly appointed military attaché to the American Legation at St. Petersburg, sailed yesterday on the City of Paris. Before the steamer sailed he said to a reporter:

"While I appreciate the kindly spirit toward myself which prompted the article in one of the papers yesterday, I cannot but feel chagrined that an imputation of smallness may be cast upon many of the best friends I have in the army. The warmest friend is a most dangerous spy. I have a few in my work in the army are capable of being West Point. I cannot but feel the number who are violent in their opinions and actions indicated in the article, is very small indeed. Where so large a number is concerned there may be a few who are really violent, but they ought to be violent, as to give the casual observer the impression that they are very numerous."

At the earliest to congratulate Capt. Zalinski upon his appointment was Lieut. W. C. Brown, Adjutant of the West Point Military Academy.

"All your friends here will agree with me in saying that if you, with your energy, do us all due justice, we will be well repaid for the information at St. Petersburg, which is worth having no one else need try."

Capt. Zalinski proceeded direct to St. Petersburg by way of London, Paris and Berlin and on reporting his arrival to the American Legation in the Russian capital will begin his studies of the affairs of the United States Government. The appointment of Capt. Zalinski to the mission is considered as coming from the commanding officer in the service who are above prejudices as one of the best selections that could be made. It is evident that Capt. Zalinski goes abroad with the warm support of the prominent men of the army. Capt. Zalinski is one of the two United States army attaches to the Legation at St. Petersburg, and in fact, for some years past the American Legation at the Russian capital has been attached to the naval or naval attaché. At the present time Lieut. Aaron Ward of the navy fills the duty of naval attaché, while Capt. Zalinski is engaged in the same work at Berlin. The appointment of Capt. Zalinski to foreign duty now gives credit to the army of six officers in Europe. The navy has three attachés, while these officers of the two services have been assigned are London, Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna and Madrid. The naval attaché and naval attaché is to observe everything in connection with their own branches of the service. The naval attaché will take note of the handling of troops, new inventions in warfare and every point which will have material bearing on the progress of America's troops, will go to the advantage of the War Department. The naval attaché performs the same work for the navy. They will be called to prevent the launch, learn about the vessel's fittings, her engines and batteries, make note of new designs and improvements, and keep up reports on the manouvers of such squadrons as they may see. All the reports will be sent to the Bureau of Navigation, Bureau of the Navy Department and some of the information received is of the greatest importance.

WANTS TO BE FREE.

A Wealthy Chicago Merchant Incarcerated in an Insane Asylum.

KANKAKEE, Ill., May 15.—James Egan, formerly a wholesale liquor merchant in Chicago, is having a hearing before Judge Reeves of the Circuit Court. Egan is trying to get a discharge from the Illinois Eastern Hospital for the Insane at this city. He claims that while in his place of business in Chicago one day he was attacked by a man who shot him and caused him to fall into the court-room and that he was tried as to his sanity there without any chance of giving him his opinion, whereupon he was confined and brought to this city. A number of his business acquaintances and members of Irish society here have been in touch with him and have come to the conclusion that there is a conspiracy to defraud Egan of his property, which he has been unable to recover, and he has been a privileged character at the hospital having had his private horses and carriage and the like. Egan is said to have been a particular friend of Dr. Cronin, and connected with several of the Irish organizations. Seven physicians were called to give their medical certificates month to week, and from frequent interviews on what were represented to be Egan's behalf, he has been told nothing to suggest insanity.

OSTER GROWERS GLOOMY.

Heavy Depredations on the Sound Beds by Star-Fish.

By Telegraph to the POST-DISPATCH.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 15.—There is gloom on the faces of New Haven oyster growers owing to the recent heavy depredations of star-fish upon the sound beds. The stars are increasing as the acreage in oysters increases. Nearly half the steamer owners now keep one-half constant watch over their beds and have been a privileged character at the hospital having had his private horses and carriage and the like. Egan is said to have been a particular friend of Dr. Cronin, and connected with several of the Irish organizations. Seven physicians were called to give their medical certificates month to week, and from frequent interviews on what were represented to be Egan's behalf, he has been told nothing to suggest insanity.

Must Have a Picnic.

There was a meeting of patrons of the Shepard School last night at General's Hotel, St. Louis, and the protest against the action of the School Board in refusing to give the children of the school a day for a picnic. Warm speeches were made and 250 signatures were secured to a declaration in favor of a school picnic. It was decided to have the cut-off on the 20th instant. The picnic will be held at the home of Henry Geiss and Henry Fugger who were appointed an Executive Committee.

THE BROOKLYN PLAYERS.

WHAT THEY HAVE TO SAY OF THEIR OWN AND OTHER CLUBS.

Exile Wins the Brooklyn Handicap and Surprises the Knowing Ones—Racing at Louisville—Baltimore Beaten by the Browns—Other Games Played Yesterday—Sports of All Sorts.

PRESIDENT C. H. BYRNE of the Brooklyns, Manager McGunnigan and the fourteen players which the organization carries in traveling, registered at the Lindell Hotel this evening. The team came here to win four games from the Browns, or at least as many of the four as possible. But Mr. Byrne is modest in his speech, although evidently very sanguine nevertheless. "We, of course, want all four of the games," he remarked, "but no doubt the Browns will want them all. We shall probably try harder to take as many as we can of the four, but will let the Browns have the rest." How many of the games that will be, I, of course, cannot say. We have an excellent team, and our men are playing together more harmoniously than any club we ever had in Brooklyn. If we meet with no accidents we should certainly stand a good chance in the race, but I want to make no predictions where we will finish. It is a hard and long race, and it is too early now to venture a prediction. We have been very unfortunate in having postponed some games to Cincinnati, Columbus and Toledo, which would almost certainly have won. I don't suppose we will gain an opportunity to play these games off, so they will very likely be lost to us altogether. Cincinnati has a good team, but it is playing in hard luck. They were very unfortunate yesterday in their batting, while we were quite lucky. Darby O'Brien caught a couple of hits that would ordinarily have been home runs. There is no truth in the story that I am after Arthur Irwin, and when we are as good as he is in any other club, then we will be.

Long Dafe Fouts, the old pitcher of the Browns, who is now playing first base for the team, is a good player, but he has never been able to make predictions," he said.

"But I will say that I think our chances for winning are good. We have a good team, and our men are playing together more harmoniously than any club we ever had in Brooklyn.
